What does boudoir photography mean to you?

Boudoir Photography is full of meaning for me! In my studio I have so many beautiful women who don't see their true beauty for who they are in that moment. They feel they need to change themselves before they can have a session. Yet once they step foot into the empowerment experience.. the once shy, vulnerable woman will walk out with the newfound sense of self-love, acceptance, confidence, and HEALING! To all the ladies... do it now! This experience is meant to help you reach those goals!

Why did you choose to pursue a career as a boudoir / fine art photographer? What got you started in boudoir?

When I first started my photography journey, I had a friend who was going through marital problems. She came to visit me on Oahu, and I chose to offer her a shoot since I was still practicing with hopes of cheering her up. That shoot ended up boosting her self-love and also rekindled her marriage. Her husband saw his woman in a whole new light and something about that shoot changed me. It gave me a purpose to help more women like her find love for themselves again. It also is very healing for me as I'm a survivor of emotional abuse. With every shoot, with every tear, with every hug I feel like it's not only therapy for other women, but also for me. When I see tears it just warms my heart!

Also, not a lot of people know this about me, but I am disabled. I have 26 screws in my spine. I had a spinal fusion years ago due to a curvature in my spine called Kyphosis and it also affected my own self esteem. Being an empowerment coach has really helped me embrace who I am and accept my body for how it is. It also allows me to connect and empathize with women who suffer that same issue with body acceptance because no one is perfect! I believe EVERYONE should have this experience to accept and feel beautiful in the skin they are in!!

What kind of creative process is there behind boudoir photography?

I've been an artist all my life so the creative process behind each shoot comes from a place of art! I want each picture to stand alone as a timeless piece. Boudoir photography is all about shaping and enhancing the body. The way the light touches the body can make or break the photo so it's important to allow a lot of curves and openings to show negative space between each part of the body. When your eyes explore a picture a little longer and you don't know where to look because you have the perfect balance of angles, and lighting...then you know it's a beautiful picture.

I'm also a hopeless romantic so my style heavily weighs on that. I have a love for vintage and glamour, and everything just comes to together when you can emotionally connect with each client!

How do you communicate with a client or model you've just met to make them comfortable for boudoir / nude photography?

The MOST important part of my creative process is EMOTION. The photo can feel flat if there is no emotion coming through. I help each woman gain access to this by talking them through their natural scenarios. I give them something to imagine. I also give them a modeling lesson at the beginning of their shoot, so they don't feel anxious. A lot of women think they need to know what to do beforehand, but I will make sure they nail their pose every time by educating them on what I look for as a photographer right before they start shooting.

How do you educate yourself to take better photos?

I learn something new every day by networking and also online classes! Styled shoots are a great way to learn new things from other photographers!

How would you describe your photography style?
If I were to describe my style it would be Emotional Romantic Glamour with vintage vibes and rich color. My studio is decorated with vintage furniture! I have 2 clawfoot tubs, 2 Victorian couches and a vintage vanity! It's very classy and I love plants, candles and furs!!

Among your works, which one is your favorite? Why?

I have a lot of favorites, but one that really sticks out for me is the story that comes along with it. I met a woman going through a divorce who was feeling very depressed, and her confidence was almost zero. She told me that her mother suggested for her to do a boudoir shoot because it helps with self-confidence. After searching online, she said she liked my style the most, so she wanted to schedule a shoot. Luckily, I had an opening one week later! When she came in, she seemed a bit shy, and you could tell she felt broken down. Throughout her shoot I could see her changing into a more confident woman. Near the end she teared up because she was overwhelmed with how beautiful she felt being complimented so much. When she came back for her reveal two weeks later, she legit cried so much it was dripping in her lap. She was soooo happy and she said it was exactly how she hoped they would look and make her feel!

Fast forward... The shoot made her feel so empowered that she went on a date a week later. She is now happily in love with that same man, and she told me that it wasn't just a photoshoot for her. She said, "it saved me". (Insert tears here) ... I'll never forget how this touched my heart as a photographer.

What type of cameras do you shoot with, boudoir and/vs other?

I shoot with a Canon EOSR5 primary and EOSR6 as backup.

What kind of other gear do you use for boudoir and/vs other?

I have a Flashpoint XPLOR 600 pro strobe and I have some GODOX speedlights.

What is the most difficult part of being a boudoir photographer for you?

Lighting can be a difficulty for any shoot because everybody is different and the task at hand is lighting each subject in their best light every time. I'm always up for any challenge and it always turns out great!

What is the most rewarding part of being a boudoir photographer for you?

When the women walk into their reveal appointment and see their photos for the first time. I always prepare myself because there are so many tears that follow. Sometimes its turns into a moment of therapy where they just want to hug and talk about their feelings, and I always welcome it with open arms. With every tear and hug i feel like I've truly lived up to my purpose. I love truly being emotionally connected to each woman and her story! I have gained so many amazing friendships from it!!

Just for fun, if you could shoot in any location, what would it be?

I love history! I would love to shoot anywhere of ancient civilization such as Petra, or Machu Picchu!

Do you have any other profession or anything you are passionate about?

Yes! I LOVE singing! It's my favorite thing to express myself! Whenever I get time, I love going to a local karaoke hangout with friends! I also love painting, drawing, and dancing!!
